

Anthony Poon

DLI Doctoral Fellow

Biography

Hello, I'm Anthony, a doctoral student in human-computer interaction for underserved populations and developing contexts at the Information Science department at Cornell University. My research interests involve designing and evaluating information technology interventions that address issues of socialization and community building. My work combines methods and perspectives from multiple disciplines, such as information and computer science, development sociology, and technology policy, to help young adults and marginalized populations foster resources and networks of support to face the challenges of a changing and unequal social world.